

Henry is doing well with the pump and we are adjusting. We change his infusion set without too much hassle, every 2 to 3 days. It is definitely a challenge and also interesting how sensitive he can be to change and how fast things change. We test his blood more often and check for ketones more often. He is such a little ball of energy and hormones his numbers are still all over the place, but much better.

I will let you all know about the concert as soon as we get a few details ironed out. We still plan on having the concert in November.

On a personal note the Kilman kids (3 older ones) are taking swim lessons and Henry is doing great! We suspend his pump and take it off while he swims. He was a little nervous at the beginning of week two, but something clicked and now he is able to put his face underwater for up to 12 seconds without holding his nose and he can even open his eyes sometimes. He is working on his floating and can move through the water a bit. He is very proud of himself, as are we.

Thank you again for all your support!
